

Beyond Anthropology

(This Letter-to-the-Editor and a great many other entertaining LTEs are available only to CofCC Members and subscribers to the CITIZENS INFORMER.)

As a trained anthropologist I've been exposed to many startling things, but none more so than cable television in the year 2021. Every time I turn on the TV it's like being in a Tarzan movie.

It appears to be the case that neither Madison Avenue advertisers nor corporate America are able to pitch their products without an endless assemblage of blacks. Moreover, most advertisements seem obsessed with promoting mixed-race couples, bi-racial offspring and "rap" music.

One memorable takeaway from black domination of TV advertising and programming is the mating behavior of Africanus primitivus. The females of this species frequently turn their backs to their audience and gyrate their buttocks up and down in a furious manner to attract males of the species.

My observations are two-fold: Females of the species Africanus primitivus have enormous buttocks and thighs, leading to the conclusion that they are steatopygous in the extreme; It is also readily apparent that this behavior does not attract males of any other species except blow flies.

This particular mating display is powerfully reminiscent of the mating displays characteristic of the Mountain Gorilla (Gorilla beringei), and essentially indistinguishable from them.

Among these close relatives of Africanus primitivus, such behavior is referred to as "presenting," a demonstrative mating behavior indicating to males that a particular female is receptive.

Another common characteristic of both Africanus primitivus and Gorilla berengei is that very soon after gestation commences, pregnant females of both species are immediately abandoned by those males that sired litters by them.

Margaret Meade,
Samoa