

Devil Went Down To Georgia

(Apologies to Charlie Daniels)

by Earl P. Holt III

The Devil went down to Georgia, lookin' for some votes to steal.
He was in a bind 'cause he was way behind and so he was desperate for some deal.

He slithered to the lectern like he didn't give a damn.
Then searched in vain for Stacey,
who took her chance to scam,
and was wisely on the lam.

He quickly spied a young man holding an enormous sign.
His sign read "LET'S GO BRANDON!"
Which the Devil thought was fine
'Cause he hadn't any mind.

The Governor of Georgia dissed the Yankee Devil's speech as an assault on voting and a federal over-reach in his state nicknamed "The Peach."

But Governor Brian Kemp
once signed a consent decree that gave carte blanche to steal votes to the Devil's spawn, Stacey and the fool blindly agreed.

The lesson here is simple politicians are like fruit:
you need to save the good ones
but give rotten ones the boot
if they are a prostitute.
