

True Meaning of Thanksgiving

by Earl P. Holt III

Despite the ludicrous myth taught for years as some sort of multiculturalist “hustle,” Thanksgiving has nothing to do with Indians saving the early colonists from starvation: That never happened. Instead, Thanksgiving Day originated as a religious observance in which our Pilgrim forebears celebrated their deliverance from socialism and collectivism.

The earliest recorded settlers in New England landed at Plymouth Rock in 1620. On their voyage across the Atlantic, these Pilgrims established the Mayflower Compact, which was also the first recorded example of a socialistic political economy in North America. Among many other things, they agreed that everyone would contribute to a common store of food and other goods, and that each person would have an equal share in its ownership and use.

The Governor-General, William Bradford, wrote a detailed history of the Mayflower Company. In it he commented that there was a great deal of sloth among some of the strongest and most able members, who felt it unfair that they should make a disproportionately large contribution to the common store but, in return, receive a share no greater than that of any other member, including those who contributed little or nothing.

Consequently, much arable land was left fallow, and by Fall, the already meager food stores began to dwindle. Approximately one-third of the Mayflower Company died that first winter, most succumbing to starvation and diseases associated with starvation.

The very next year, the socialistic elements of the Mayflower Compact were eliminated, specifically, those dealing with this "common store" of food and its equal division among members. The institution of private property was re-established and vigorously defended. Thereafter, members were free to work their own plots of land and were also free to dispose of the fruits of their labor as each saw fit.

As a consequence of the economic benefits of private property, the following year produced such a bountiful harvest that those early colonists were beside themselves with gratitude to Providence. As a gesture of their gratitude, they established a Day of Thanksgiving, and even invited the Indians to share in their bounty.

To those with the intellect and honesty to take an objective look at the plight of public education, it should come as no surprise that the idiots and traitors who administer our public schools have allowed the true meaning of Thanksgiving to be completely lost to the last several generations. Moreover, it's doubtful they would impart its true meaning to a current generation even if they were aware of it, which few if any are.

Ironically, the very idiots in the NEA who teach in and run our public schools would establish socialism tomorrow if they could, never having themselves, learned the lessons of the Mayflower Compact. Thus they continue to impart collectivism and other forms of ignorance to their wards, robbing them not only of their rich cultural heritage, but also some of the most profound lessons that history has to offer.
