

No Good Deed Unpunished

by Earl P. Holt III

There's a guy named "MrBeast" who has drilled over 100 FREE water wells across black Africa, and then documented his philanthropy on YouTube. For much of sub-Saharan Africa, his wells are the only source of drinking water because its denizens have not yet contaminated the aquifers with their defecations. (See: Karin McQuillan. "What I Learned in the Peace Corps in Africa." American Thinker, January 17, 2018.)

A recent video reveals MrBeast and his team supplying a hospital in Zimbabwe with fresh water, in addition to water wells drilled in Uganda, Somalia, Cameroon and Kenya. MrBeast estimates he has brought clean drinking water to half a million black Africans.

MrBeast and Rig

Not at all surprising for this dishonest age, MrBeast has incurred some rather venomous criticism for what most people would consider to be his good deeds. He has even been called a "racist" for his philanthropy, proving you can't please everyone, even when your actions should be a slam-dunk. You see, black race-hustlers and other apologists for black inadequacy are offended that it took a WHITE MAN to bring potable water to much of black Africa.

Apparently, many "afro-centric" individuals are outraged that MrBeast has helped to perpetuate the stereotype that black Africa is totally dependent on Western whites for "handouts and philanthropic intervention." (I wonder where they might get that idea?)

As a matter of fact, were it not for the white man's technology and infrastructure, black Africa would still be living in the stone-age, exactly as their ancestors did for hundreds of thousands of years before them. They would not yet have invented the wheel or a written language.

One niggress in particular got her feathers ruffled by the successes of MrBeast. Her name is Saran Kaba Jones, who is described by Wikipedia as a "clean water advocate and social entrepreneur" who heads FACE

Africa, a group apparently funded by the United Nations or some other foolish organizations and governments. Here are her criticisms:

"I've been doing this for 15 years, but we've been struggling to continue the work because funding, awareness, and advocacy all take work... Overnight, this person comes along, who happens to be a white male figure with a huge platform, and all of a sudden, he gets all of the attention..."

Since Saran Kaba Jones is a black African, I'll translate her remarks for those who do not happen to possess a Ph.D. in Nigrology as I do: "This cracker has achieved more in eight months than I have in 15 years, and he probably did it at one-fiftieth the cost."

Obviously, MrBeast has made her organization -- and every other organization like it -- look very ineffective in contrast. It seems she would prefer that black Africans die of dysentery and dehydration rather than see a white man get credit for doing what she is supposedly doing. The difference is that MrBeast is a true philanthropist, while she is a "social entrepreneur," who appears to be primarily interested in publicity and a hefty salary.
