

The Electoral College

The Electoral College was established by the Framers of the Constitution to ensure that smaller and less populated states -- such as Rhode Island or Connecticut -- had a stake in selecting the president during national elections, and couldn't simply be ignored by candidates.

More recently, it has the added benefit of QUARANTINING VOTER FRAUD within states where it originates, and prevents this malignancy from spilling over and contaminating the election of a president. For example, a state might fabricate one billion fraudulent votes, but that state's electoral influence is still limited by the number of its Electors.

In the opinion of most educated and intelligent people, the Electoral College was an example of the brilliance of the Framers, and eliminating it would be a disaster. However, in the interest of fair play, we at the Council of Conservative Citizens are willing to publish the following Letter to the Editor offering an opposing point of view:

Letter Opposing the Electoral College

Alls dem brothas and sistahs bees tawkin agin dat Elekrikel College, an I is proposed to dat Elekrikel Collidge. I doos my own wirin' an I ain't never bin to no Elekrikel Collidge to lern me nuffins.

Qwite natcherly, I gets zapped frum thyme to thyme wif dem hot wireses, but wun ob dees days I gwana lern which one bees de hot wun, and which one bees de kool wun. Wif my natcheral brane powder, I shood get dat rite, cause it bees a 50-50 prostitution, don it?

I agreases wif all dem brothas and sistahs whut wants to embolish dat Elekrikal Collidge so we kan bild somephun mo to de liken ob us blak fokeses, sech as a nite-club o a ho-house o a wing-joynt. Pakkege likker is sho nuff good two!

Dem whyte fokeses don't thinks we nose nuffin. Why jus de udder day sum whyte menses dun tole me dat us blak fokeses don bees nowin nuffin bout vernacular.

I tole em "what you meen I don no nuffin bout vernacular? I had it wun thyme but sum dokter dun gibbed me penisillum fo it!"

Tyrone Jones
Tularemia, AL